Michael,

An email was sent a while back to Program Directors of selected graduate programs whose accreditation was to expire on December 31, 2022, that their accreditation was administratively extended to June 30, 2023, to spread out the reaccreditation load over the course of the year. The University of Tennessee program was one of these.

The program is now accredited to June 30, 2023, and may be extended to June 30, 2025, upon successful review of annual reports.

Please let me know if you need additional documentation.

George

CAMPEP Accredited Graduate Programs in Medical Physics

Entries Last Updated December 7, 2022

† Indicates institutions offering tracks within their degree program which are not CAMPEP compliant. Students graduating from these institutions who have completed the CAMPEP accredited program will be identified through an appropriate certificate awarded on completion of the program.

‡ Indicates institutions that are accredited but have been found to be non-compliant with one or more CAMPEP standards. Public disclosure statements can be found at: <http://www.campep.org/PublicDisclosure.asp>

‡‡Provisional accreditation for a period of up to three years may be granted at the discretion of the CAMPEP Board if circumstances preclude awarding of initial or full accreditation. The most common reason for such provisional accreditation is in the case of a new program that has not yet graduated or admitted any students. Provisional accreditation may be extended when all the compliance conditions have been met.

**Granted administrative extension of accreditation while under review for reaccreditation.
